

Undertaking your Literature Review

An integral part of your PhD is the literature review. It forms the background and context for your original research. Through writing your literature review, your contribution to your field should become clear. In some cases the literature review can also provide material for an independent publication. In this workshop you will learn:

- Where to search
- How to read an article
- How to write a synopsis
- How to writing a critical review
- How to structure your literature review

This is a 3-hour interactive workshop for 1st year postgraduate researchers and Master-level students.
