

Building a professional network

Successful academics are members of extensive academic networks. In order to disseminate research findings, create academic and professional collaborations, secure funding for your work, to find job opportunities, gain experiences, to be influential in your work – for all these things and more, you will need your own professional academic network.

This half-day event will provide an opportunity to think about the kinds of people you need 'on your team'. What might you be doing now in order to find, identify and build relationships with your future colleagues?

We'll look at issues of service, reciprocity, your richness as a resource to others. We consider issues of discoverability. Some dos and don't of interaction. The role of curiosity. You'll identify opportunities for interaction and collaboration and create a plan of action.

This is a 3-hour interactive workshop for postgraduate researchers. It is available in person or online
